ARGUMENT OF THE EPF ANNUAL CONFERENCE 2024 IN FLORENCE

IDENTIFICATIONS

Dear Colleagues

It is with great pleasure that we welcome you to the beautiful and historical city of Florence for the EPF's 37th Annual Conference on the theme of IDENTIFICATIONS. This theme follows on quite seamlessly from those of the recent EPF conferences – Realities, Ideals and Illusions. It's striking how in so many of the stimulating plenaries and panels presented during those conferences the term 'identifications' frequently arose with a variety of meanings and implications.

The word 'identification' is derived from Medieval, later Renaissance Latin as Literary Latin and means the 'sameness' or 'becoming same' with another object.

The personality is formed through a series of identifications and in 'The Interpretation of Dreams' Freud first used the term identifications to refer to a particular process that is characteristic of the dream-work. Hysterical symptoms, such as imitation and mental contagion, were tied in with the hysterical patient's unconscious identifications:

'In hysterical phantasies, just as in dreams, it is enough for purposes of identification that the subject should have thoughts of sexual relations without their having taken place in reality'.

Strachey, in his editorial note, points out that Freud had already referred to identifications in his correspondence with Fliess in 1897. However, after this reference in 'The Interpretation of Dreams,' he did not elaborate further until twenty years later in Chapter 7 of Group Psychology (1921), which was dedicated to an examination of the process of identifications.

Freud outlines three sources of identification: firstly, the original emotional tie with an object; secondly, in a regressive way and by means of introjection of the object into the ego, identification becomes a substitute for a libidinal object-tie; and thirdly, any new perception of a common quality in the object (which is not an object of the sexual instinct). To this third Freud adds,

'The more important this common quality is, the more successful may this partial identification become, and it may thus represent the beginning of a new tie'.

This process is particularly powerful in all groups; political as well as psychoanalytic identifications in and between our societies at an international level. Freud completes Chapter 7 with a notably long footnote indicating the connection between identifications, imitation and empathy. Citing Robertson Smith's book, 'Kinship and Marriage' (1885), Freud comments on the inhibition of aggressiveness towards those with whom one is identified because of the acknowledgement of the possession of a common substance. This feature, he claims, is associated with family identifications as he had addressed in Totem and Taboo (1913).

Psychoanalytic authors, since Freud, have elaborated particularly on the unconscious processes involved in identifications, and a PEP search of the term comes up with over 14,000 entries. 'Identification with the aggressor' was not developed by Freud, but rather his daughter, Anna Freud. Sandor Ferenczi also developed the concept but with a different emphasis. For Ferenczi, in his 'Confusion of Tongues between Adults and the Child', it is the child's innocence that is violated by the parental sexual attack that causes the child to 'introject the guilt feelings of the adult' (Ferenczi 1933).

Melanie Klein introduced the term 'projective identification' in 'The Psychoanalysis of Children' (1932), and developed it further when she proposed the notion of a paranoid schizoid position in 'Notes on some schizoid mechanisms' (1946). Projective identification was a psychical mechanism emanating from the paranoid-schizoid position and its aim was to injure you in March and wish you within. The root of this aim was envy of the object. Klein's original formulation occurred intrapsychically from birth. Later, Bion developed the notion of a normal projective identification in 'Learning from Experience' (1962).

Winnicott follows and elaborates Freud's differentiation between primary and secondary identifications. When he republished his paper 'The Use of an Object', in 'Playing and Reality' (1971), he added to the title '... and relating through identifications'. Why? Primary identifications were associated with object relating, in Winnicott's language, the stage of development before the infant is able to put himself into the other's shoes. While 'secondary identifications', refers to the capacity to discern the Other as separate, as he outlines in Chapter 10 (1971)

– 'Interrelating apart from instinctual drive and in terms of cross-identifications'. To move from object relating to object usage was not a given for Winnicott. In fact this move could not occur without the mother's psychic facilitation. Thus secondary identifications requires an object who will be robust enough to survive in mind and body.

Perhaps Laplanche followed Ferenczi when he questioned Freud's concept of primary narcissism and proposed that the infant's narcissistic ideal highlighted the parent's projected ideal. The 'primacy of the other', for Laplanche, meant that the parents 'assigned' the infant's gender. These formulations, as well as all the above, bring us right into the heart of the fraught and controversial clinical issues today concerning gender identifications. Rosine Jozef Perelberg, has recently distinguished between the terms 'identification' and 'identity' proposing that, especially acting out violent patients, may be 'overwhelmed between masculine and feminine identificatory processes' (1999).

How are analysts working today on this central theme in Freud's work and how do we reflect on the differentiations between primary and Oedipal identifications? What can the psychoanalytic process offer to the individual who is suffering with deeply confusing and conflicting identifications. How are we to comprehend and understand some of the perplexing clinical issues concerning gender identifications? With the theme of identifications we hope that the panels will stimulate further discussion and elaboration. We are very much looking forward to seeing you in March and wish you a very fruitful and enjoyable conference in one of Italy's most stunning cities.

ARGUMENT DE LA CONFÉRENCE ANNUELLE DE LA FEP 2024 À FLORENCE

IDENTIFICATIONS

Chers collègues

C'est avec grand plaisir que nous vous accueillons dans la belle ville historique de Florence pour la 37^e conférence annuelle de la EFP. Ce thème, IDENTIFICATIONS, s'inscrit dans la continuité des dernières conférences de la FEP, « Réalités », « Idéaux » et « Illusions ». Il est frappant de constater qu'au cours des différentes séances plénières et ateliers de ces conférences, le terme « identification » a souvent été utilisé avec une variété de sens et d'implications.

Le mot « identification » est dérivé du latin médiéval, puis du latin de la Renaissance et du latin littéraire, et signifie « être ou devenir semblable » à un autre objet.

La personnalité se forme à travers une série d'identifications. Dans « L'interprétation des rêves », Freud a utilisé pour la première fois le terme d'identification pour désigner un processus particulier caractéristique du travail onirique. Les symptômes hystériques, tels que l'imitation et la contagion mentale, sont liés aux identifications inconscientes du patient hystérique.

« Dans les fantasmes hystériques, comme dans les rêves, il suffit pour l'identification que le sujet ait des pensées de relations sexuelles sans qu'elles aient eu lieu dans la réalité ».

Strachey, dans sa note éditoriale, souligne que Freud avait déjà fait référence aux identifications dans sa correspondance avec Fliess en 1897. Cependant, après cette référence dans « L'interprétation des rêves », il ne s'est pas étendu davantage jusqu'à ce que, vingt ans plus tard, il consacre le chapitre 7 de « Psychologie des foules et analyse du moi » (1921) à l'examen du processus d'identification.

Freud décrit trois sources d'identification : premièrement, le lien affectif originel avec un objet ; deuxièmement, de manière régressive et par le biais de l'introjection de l'objet dans le moi, l'identification devient un substitut du lien libidinal à l'objet ; et troisièmement, toute nouvelle perception d'une qualité commune dans l'objet (qui n'est pas un objet de la pulsion sexuelle). À ce troisième point, Freud ajoute :

« Plus cette communauté est significative, plus cette identification partielle doit pouvoir réussir et correspondre ainsi au début d'un nouveau lien ».

Ce processus est particulièrement puissant dans tous les groupes, qu'il s'agisse d'identifications politiques ou psychanalytiques, dans et entre nos sociétés au niveau international. Freud termine le chapitre 7 par une note de bas de page particulièrement longue indiquant le lien entre les identifications, l'imitation et l'empathie. Citant le livre de Robertson Smith, « Kinship and Marriage » (1885), Freud commente l'inhibition de l'agressivité envers les personnes auxquelles on s'identifie en raison de la reconnaissance de la possession d'une substance commune. Cette caractéristique, affirme-t-il, est associée aux identifications familiales qu'il avait abordées dans Totem et Tabou (1913).

Les auteurs psychanalytiques post-Freudiens ont particulièrement développé les processus inconscients impliqués dans les identifications ; une recherche PEP sur ce terme donne plus de 14 000 entrées. L'identification à l'agresseur n'a pas été développée par Freud, mais par sa fille, Anna Freud. Sandor Ferenczi a également développé ce concept, mais avec un accent différent. Pour Ferenczi, dans sa « Confusion des langues entre l'adulte et l'enfant », c'est l'innocence de l'enfant, violée par l'agression sexuelle parentale, qui pousse l'enfant à « introjecter les sentiments de culpabilité de l'adulte » (Ferenczi 1933).

Melanie Klein a introduit le terme de « identification projective » dans « La psychanalyse des enfants » (1932), et l'a développé davantage lorsqu'elle a proposé la notion de position schizoïde paranoïde dans « Notes sur quelques mécanismes schizoïdes » (1946). L'identification projective est un mécanisme psychique émanant de la position paranoïaque-schizoïde et son but est de blesser et de contrôler la mère de l'intérieur. Son origine est l'envie de l'objet. La formulation originale de Klein se produit intrapsychiquement dès la naissance. Plus tard, Bion a développé la notion d'identification projective normale dans « Aux sources de l'expérience » (1962).

Winnicott suit et développe la différenciation de Freud entre les identifications primaires et secondaires. Lorsqu'il a republié son article « L'utilisation de l'objet » dans « Jeu et réalité » (1971), il a ajouté au titre « ...et le mode de relation à l'objet au travers des identifications ». Pourquoi ? Les identifications primaires étaient associées au fait de se référer à un objet, dans le langage de Winnicott, le stade de développement avant que le nourrisson ne soit capable de se mettre à la place de l'autre. Les « identifications secondaires », quant à elles, renvoient à la capacité de percevoir l'autre en tant que personne distincte, comme il l'explique au chapitre 10 (1971) - « L'interrelation envisagée en termes d'identifications croisées et indépendamment des motions pulsionnelles ». Passer de la relation d'objet à l'utilisation de l'objet n'allait pas de soi pour Winnicott. En fait, ce passage ne pouvait se faire sans la facilitation psychique de la mère. Ainsi, les identifications secondaires nécessitent un objet suffisamment robuste pour survivre dans l'esprit et le corps.

Laplanche a peut-être suivi Ferenczi lorsqu'il a remis en question le concept de narcissisme primaire de Freud et a proposé de comprendre l'idéal narcissique du bébé comme un idéal projeté des parents. Le « primat de l'autre », pour Laplanche, signifie que les parents « assignent » le genre de l'enfant. Ces formulations, ainsi que toutes celles qui précèdent, nous plongent au cœur des questions cliniques délicates et controversées qui se posent aujourd'hui à propos des identifications de genre. Rosine Jozef Perelberg a récemment établi une distinction entre les termes « identification » et « identité », proposant que les patients violents, en particulier ceux qui agissent, peuvent être « débordés par des processus identificatoires masculins et féminins » (1999).

Comment les analystes travaillent-ils aujourd'hui sur ce thème central de l'œuvre de Freud et comment réfléchissons-nous aux différences entre les identifications primaire et œdipienne ? Que peut offrir le processus psychanalytique à l'individu qui souffre d'identifications profondément confuses et conflictuelles ? Comment pouvons-nous appréhender et comprendre certaines des questions cliniques déroutantes concernant les identifications de genre ? Avec le thème des identifications, nous espérons que les panels stimuleront la discussion et l'élaboration. Nous sommes impatients de vous voir en mars et vous souhaitons une conférence très fructueuse et agréable dans l'une des plus belles villes d'Italie.

IDENTIFIZIERUNGEN

Liebe Kolleginnen und Kollegen,

mit großer Freude begrüßen wir Sie in der schönen und historischen Stadt Florenz zur 37. Jahreskonferenz der EPF zum Thema IDENTIFIZIERUNGEN. Dieses Thema knüpft nahtlos an die Themen der letzten EPF-Konferenzen an – Realitäten, Ideale und Illusionen. Es ist bemerkenswert, dass in so vielen der anregenden Plenarsitzungen und Podiumsdiskussionen, die während dieser Konferenzen gehalten wurden, der Begriff „Identifizierungen“ in einer Vielzahl von Bedeutungen und Implikationen auftauchte.

Das Wort „Identifizierung“ stammt aus dem Latein des Mittelalters, später der Renaissance, und bedeutet das „Gleichsein“ oder „Gleichwerden“ mit einem anderen Objekt.

Die Persönlichkeit wird durch eine Reihe von Identifizierungen geformt, und in „Die Traumdeutung“ verwendete Freud den Begriff der Identifizierung zum ersten Mal, um einen bestimmten Prozess zu bezeichnen, der für die Traumarbeit charakteristisch ist. Hysterische Symptome wie Imitation und psychische Ansteckung wurden mit den unbewussten Identifizierungen von hysterischen Patienten in Verbindung gebracht:

„In der hysterischen Phantasie wie im Traum genügt es für die Identifizierung, daß man an sexuelle Beziehungen denkt, ohne daß sie darum als real gelten müssen“ (GW, 2:156).

Strachey weist in einer redaktionellen Anmerkung darauf hin, dass Freud bereits 1897 in seinem Briefwechsel mit Fliess von Identifizierungen gesprochen hatte. Nach dieser Erwähnung in „Die Traumdeutung“ ging er jedoch erst zwanzig Jahre später in Kapitel 7 der Massenpsychologie (1921), das einer Untersuchung des Prozesses der Identifizierung gewidmet war, näher darauf ein.

Freud nennt drei Quellen der Identifikation: erstens ist sie „die ursprünglichste Gefühlsbindung an ein Objekt“; zweitens wird die Identifizierung auf regressivem Wege und durch die Introjektion des Objekts in das Ich zu einem Ersatz für eine libidinöse Objektbindung; und drittens entsteht sie bei jeder neuen Wahrnehmung einer Gemeinsamkeit mit dem Objekt (das kein Objekt des Sexualtriebs ist). Zu dieser dritten Quelle fügt Freud hinzu:

„Je bedeutsamer diese Gemeinsamkeit ist, desto erfolgreicher muß diese partielle Identifizierung werden können und so dem Anfang einer neuen Bindung entsprechen“ (GW 13:118).

Dieser Prozess ist besonders stark in allen Gruppen, sowohl bei politischen als auch bei psychoanalytischen Identifizierungen in und zwischen unseren Gesellschaften auf internationaler Ebene. Freud schließt Kapitel 7 mit einer bemerkenswert langen Fußnote ab, in der er auf den Zusammenhang zwischen Identifizierung, Nachahmung und Einfühlung hinweist. Die Hemmung der Aggressivität gegenüber denjenigen, mit denen man sich identifiziert, beruhe auf einer Anerkennung einer gemeinsamen Substanz, so Freud unter Berufung auf Robertson Smiths Buch „Kinship and Marriage“ (1885). Dieses Merkmal, so führt er aus, steht im Zusammenhang mit familiären Identifizierungen, auf die er in Totem und Tabu (1913) eingegangen war.

Psychoanalytische Autoren nach Freud haben sich insbesondere mit den unbewussten Prozessen bei Identifizierungen befasst, und eine PEP-Suche nach dem Begriff ergibt über 14.000 Einträge. Die „Identifizierung mit dem Aggressor“ wurde nicht von Freud, sondern von seiner Tochter Anna Freud entwickelt. Auch Sandor Ferenczi entwickelte das Konzept, allerdings mit einem anderen Schwerpunkt. Für Ferenczi, in seiner „Sprachverwirrung zwischen dem Erwachsenen und dem Kind“, ist es die Unschuld des Kindes, die durch den elterlichen sexuellen Übergriff verletzt wird. Dieser Übergriff führe zu einer „ängstlichen Identifizierung mit dem erwachsenen Partner im Seelenleben des Kindes“ und zur „Introjektion des Schuldgefühls des Erwachsenen“ (Ferenczi 1932).

Melanie Klein führte den Begriff „projektive Identifikation“ in „Die Psychoanalyse des Kindes“ (1932) ein und entwickelte ihn weiter, indem sie in „Bemerkungen über einige schizoide Mechanismen“ (1946) den Begriff der paranoid-schizoiden Position vorschlug. Die projektive Identifizierung war ein psychischer Mechanismus, der von der paranoid-schizoiden Position ausging und darauf abzielte, die Mutter von innen heraus zu verletzen und zu kontrollieren. Die Wurzel dieses Ziels war der Neid auf das Objekt. Entsprechend Kleins ursprünglicher Formulierung geschehe dies intrapsychisch von Geburt an. Später entwickelte Bion in „Lernen durch Erfahrung“ (1962) den Begriff der normalen projektiven Identifizierung.

Winnicott folgt Freuds Unterscheidung zwischen primären und sekundären Identifizierungen und führt sie weiter aus. Als er seinen Aufsatz „The Use of an Object“ in „Playing and Reality“ (1971) neu veröffentlichte, fügte er dem Titel „... and relating through identifications“ hinzu. (auf Deutsch: „Objektverwendung und Identifizierung“ in: „Vom Spiel zur Kreativität“; 2022, 17. Aufl.) Warum? Primäre Identifizierungen wurden mit dem sich Beziehen auf ein Objekt verknüpft, in Winnicotts Sprache dem Entwicklungsstadium vor der Fähigkeit des Säuglings, sich in die Situation des anderen hineinzusetzen. „Sekundäre Identifizierungen“ hingegen beziehen sich auf die Fähigkeit, den Anderen als getrennt wahrzunehmen, wie er im Kapitel 10 (1971/2022) „Interrelating apart from instinctual drive and in terms of cross-identifications“ (auf Deutsch etwa: sich aufeinander beziehen außerhalb des Triebgeschehens und mittels Kreuzidentifizierungen) darlegt. Der Übergang von der Objektbeziehung zur Objektverwendung war für Winnicott keine Selbstverständlichkeit. Tatsächlich konnte dieser Schritt nicht ohne die psychische Unterstützung der Mutter erfolgen. Sekundäre Identifizierungen erfordern also ein Objekt, das robust genug ist, um in Geist und Körper zu überleben.

Vielleicht folgte Laplanche Ferenczi, als er Freuds Konzept des primären Narzissmus hinterfragte und vorschlug, das narzisstische Ideal vom Baby als projiziertes Ideal der Eltern zu verstehen. Das „Primat des Anderen“ bedeutete für Laplanche, dass die Eltern dem Kind Gender „zuschreiben“. Diese Formulierungen führen uns genauso wie alle oben genannten mitten hinein in die heiklen und kontroversen klinischen Fragen, die sich heute in Bezug auf Genderidentifizierungen stellen. Rosine Jozef Perelberg hat kürzlich zwischen den Begriffen „Identifizierung“ und „Identität“ unterschieden und meint, dass insbesondere gewalttätige Patienten im Hin und Her „zwischen männlichen und weiblichen Identifizierungsprozessen überfordert sein können“ (1999).

Wie arbeiten Analytiker heute an diesem zentralen Thema in Freuds Werk und wie denken wir über die Unterscheidung zwischen primären und ödipalen Identifizierungen? Was kann der psychoanalytische Prozess dem Einzelnen bieten, der unter zutiefst verwirrenden und widersprüchlichen Identifizierungen leidet? Wie können wir einige der verwirrenden klinischen Fragen im Zusammenhang mit Genderidentifizierungen verstehen und begreifen? Wir hoffen, dass die Panels mit dem Thema Identifizierungen zu weiteren Diskussionen und Ausarbeitungen anregen werden. Wir freuen uns sehr darauf, Sie im März zu sehen und wünschen Ihnen eine sehr fruchtbare und angenehme Konferenz in einer der schönsten Städte Italiens.

IDENTIFICAZIONI

Cari colleghi

È con grande piacere che vi diamo il benvenuto nella bellissima e storica città di Firenze per la 37a Conferenza annuale dell'EPF sul tema delle IDENTIFICAZIONI. Questo tema segue senza soluzione di continuità quelli delle recenti conferenze dell'EPF - Realtà, Ideali e Illusioni. È sorprendente come in molte delle stimolanti plenarie e tavole rotonde presentate durante queste conferenze sia emerso spesso il termine «identificazioni» con una varietà di significati e implicazioni.

La parola «identificazione» deriva dal latino medievale e poi rinascimentale come latino letterario e significa «somiglianza» o «diventare uguale» a un altro oggetto.

La personalità si forma attraverso una serie di identificazioni e ne «L'interpretazione dei sogni» Freud usò per la prima volta il termine identificazioni per riferirsi a un particolare processo caratteristico del lavoro onirico. I sintomi isterici, come l'imitazione e l'infezione psichica, erano legati alle identificazioni inconsce del paziente isterico:

«Nella fantasia isterica, come nel sogno, è sufficiente per l'identificazione pensare a rapporti sessuali, senza che essi debbano per questo avere valore di realtà».

Strachey, nella sua nota editoriale, sottolinea che Freud aveva già fatto riferimento alle identificazioni nella sua corrispondenza con Fliess nel 1897. Tuttavia, dopo questo riferimento ne «L'interpretazione dei sogni», egli non approfondì ulteriormente questo tema fino a vent'anni dopo, nel capitolo 7 di Psicologia delle Masse (1921), dedicato all'esame del processo di identificazione.

Freud delinea tre fonti di identificazione: in primo luogo, il legame affettivo originario con un oggetto; in secondo luogo, in modo regressivo e attraverso l'introiezione dell'oggetto nell'Io, l'identificazione diventa un sostituto del legame libidico con l'oggetto; in terzo luogo, qualsiasi nuova percezione di una qualità in comune con l'oggetto (che non sia un oggetto dell'istinto sessuale). A questo terzo Freud aggiunge, «Quanto più significativo è tale aspetto posseduto in comune, tanto più riuscita deve poter divenire quest'identificazione parziale, così da corrispondere all'inizio di un nuovo legame».

Questo processo è particolarmente potente in tutti i gruppi; identificazioni politiche e psicoanalitiche nelle e tra le nostre società a livello internazionale. Freud completa il capitolo 7 con una lunga nota a piè di pagina che indica il legame tra identificazioni, imitazione ed empatia. Citando il libro di Robertson Smith, «Parentela e matrimonio» (1885), Freud commenta l'inibizione dell'aggressività nei confronti di coloro con cui ci si identifica a causa del riconoscimento del possesso di una sostanza comune. Questa caratteristica, sostiene, è associata alle identificazioni familiari, così come aveva indicato in Totem e tabù (1913).

Gli autori psicoanalitici, a partire da Freud, hanno elaborato in modo particolare i processi inconsci coinvolti nelle identificazioni, e una ricerca PEP del termine ha prodotto oltre 14.000 voci. L'identificazione con l'aggressore non è stata sviluppata da Freud, ma da sua figlia Anna Freud. Anche Sandor Ferenczi ha sviluppato il concetto, ma con un'enfasi diversa. Per Ferenczi, nel suo «Confusione delle lingue tra adulti e bambini», è l'innocenza del bambino a essere violata dall'attacco parentale sessuale, che fa sì che il bambino «introietti i sensi di colpa dell'adulto» (Ferenczi 1933).

Melanie Klein introdusse il termine «identificazione proiettiva» in «La psicoanalisi dei bambini» (1932) e lo sviluppò ulteriormente quando propose la nozione di una posizione paranoide schizoide in «Note su alcuni meccanismi schizoidi» (1946). L'identificazione proiettiva era un meccanismo psichico che emanava dalla posizione schizo-paranoide e il suo scopo era quello di ferire e controllare la madre dall'interno. La radice di questo obiettivo era l'invidia per l'oggetto. La formulazione originale della Klein si verificava a livello intrapsichico fin dalla nascita. In seguito, Bion sviluppò la nozione di una normale identificazione proiettiva in «Apprendere dall'Esperienza» (1962).

Winnicott segue ed elabora la differenziazione di Freud tra identificazioni primarie e secondarie. Quando ripubblicò il suo articolo «L'uso di un oggetto», in «Gioco e realtà» (1971), aggiunse al titolo «...e l'entrare in rapporto attraverso identificazioni». Perché? Le identificazioni primarie erano associate alla relazione con l'oggetto, nel linguaggio di Winnicott, lo stadio dello sviluppo prima che il bambino sia in grado di mettersi nei panni dell'altro. Mentre le «identificazioni secondarie» si riferiscono alla capacità di discernere l'altro in quanto separato, come delinea Winnicott nel capitolo 10 (1971) - «Il rapporto reciproco al di fuori della pulsione istintuale e in termini di identificazioni crociate». Passare dalla relazione con l'oggetto all'uso dell'oggetto non era scontato per Winnicott. Infatti, questo passaggio non poteva avvenire senza la facilitazione psichica della madre. Le identificazioni secondarie richiedono quindi un oggetto che sia abbastanza robusto da sopravvivere nella mente e nel corpo.

Forse Laplanche ha seguito Ferenczi quando ha messo in discussione il concetto di narcisismo primario di Freud e ha proposto che l'ideale narcisistico del bambino evidenziasse l'ideale proiettato dal genitore. Il «primato dell'altro», per Laplanche, significa che i genitori «assegnano» il sesso del bambino. Queste formulazioni, così come tutte quelle sopra citate, ci portano dritti al cuore delle problematiche cliniche, oggi molto spinose e controverse, che riguardano le identificazioni di genere. Rosine Jozef Perelberg ha recentemente fatto una distinzione tra i termini «identificazione» e «identità», proponendo che, soprattutto i pazienti con acting violenti, possono essere «sopraffatti tra processi identificativi maschili e femminili» (1999).

Come lavorano oggi gli analisti su questo tema centrale dell'opera di Freud e come riflettiamo sulle differenziazioni tra identificazioni primarie ed edipiche? Che cosa può offrire il processo psicoanalitico all'individuo che soffre di identificazioni profondamente confuse e conflittuali? Come possiamo comprendere e capire alcune delle perplessità cliniche che riguardano le identificazioni di genere? Con il tema delle identificazioni ci auguriamo che i panel stimolino ulteriori discussioni ed elaborazioni. Non vediamo l'ora di vedervi a marzo e vi auguriamo una conferenza molto fruttuosa e piacevole in una delle città più belle d'Italia.
